An irrigation project was begun in the village of Mediuan Hainbut (N 22-35, E 113-05) Haien, Kwangtung. construction of a dike from Yangkuan to Haingwanchung was planned. It was to be financed by a levy of JMP70,000 per mou. Persons from 15 to 50 years of age were to be subject to conscription for the job.
the price of rice had been unchanged. The rise in other commodities, however, had ranged from 100 to 200 percent; and all cooperatives had closed. Whereas fish could be purchased formerly at the rate of 5 to 6 taels for 10 cents, it had now become scarce; the same amount of money would buy only 2 or $2\frac{1}{2}$ taels. Eggs, which formerly sold at the rate of 5 or 6 for 10 cents, were selling for 7 or 8 cents each.
The second of the second cultiple creditor's cooperative facilitated remittances from the overseas Chinese to their relatives. The cooperative was said to aim at serving the overseas Chinese.
the government had, beginning in 1955, identified the overseas Chinese with the working class and decreed that the identification of this group with the landlord class be stopped.
the admission of overseas Chinese into China was based on the merit of their documents. It was therefore expedient that these Chinese acquire as many documents as possible. Special privileges were extended to overseas Chinese by the customs, and many items of personal property were permitted shipment into the country. In extreme cases, a person was allowed to pay tax on items of his property and retain it for his own use.
